

Yes.

These facilities were built with the cooperation of the public for the benefit of the public, and the law recognizes their essential nature. It is beneficial to the public to have them open for purchase of access. It is unreasonable to think that these facilities, which could never have been created solely with the resources of big businesses, now exist solely for the benefit of big businesses.